The British Navy Not What it is Cracked Up to Be, LONDON, Jan. 6.—The English are radually waking up to the fact that their navy is not what they have im-The statement that sixteen armor-clad ships are all ready to sail, but could not hurt an enemy except by running against his ships, as they have no ning against his ships, as they have no guns, has borne the British naval deficiency strongly in upon British minds. Lord Charles Bercaford is working hard to get things into condition, and will not accept any measures. At a dinner last night he declared that he wouldn't rest until he had induced Parliament to make the fleet of this country strong enough to defend its shores and its commerce against the fleets of any other nation, one of them to be France, which is very nearly, if not quite equal to England in naval strength, a fact that makes it uncomfortable for the traditional ruler of the waves.

comfortable for the traditional ruler of the waves.

Lord Salisbury, in a recent speech, has shown that the complaints of frightened Englishmen, led by the Telegraph, as to the incomplete defenses of the country, have at last affected him, and England may be expected very soon to be asked for a tremendously large sum, to get in fighting condition. Certainly tables recently produced, showing the war strength of the European nations, has caused England, with her handful of soldiers, to reflect that things are not what they used to be.

A man who stands high in railway cricles told a reporter this afternoon, that while he was not at liberty to give the language of the agreement, he could say that the engineers had abandoned their claim for the abolishment of the trip system and the inangaration of the mile age plan as used by the other roads. They had also withdrawn their demand for the arbitration of the classification or graded pay roll.

On these, which were the chief points of the strike, the company was a winner. On the other hand they had consented to employ Brotherhood men, in preference to others, as fast as vacancies occurred, and would relinstate its old omployes whenever it could. The black list, which has been a bar to the strikers obtaining work on other roads, is also to be done away with. On these points the Brotherhood is a winner.

It is also runored that the compromise will result in the dismissal of the prosecution of the alleged dynamiters, but if is uncertain.
